The Creatives you need without the shoot.

Professional product photography isn't created by just writing prompts.

It is the outcome of hundreds of technical produtcion grade parameters, drafted and fine-tuned by experts.

How a typical traditional prompt looks like

Create a photorealistic full-body studio portrait of a young woman standing upright and facing directly toward the camera. She has medium-length wavy brown hair, natural skin texture, minimal makeup, and a calm neutral expression. She is wearing a simple, fitted, long-sleeve beige bodysuit with a clean, minimal design. Her arms are naturally relaxed at her sides, with her hands fully visible. Use a straight-on, eye-level camera angle with a centered, symmetrical composition. Show the entire figure from head to feet, maintaining realistic human proportions. Soft diffused studio lighting, subtle natural shadows, light neutral gray background, editorial fashion photography aesthetic. Realistic skin pores, natural hair strands, accurate fabric texture, and anatomically correct hands and fingers. High-resolution, clean commercial fashion photography, realistic color grading, minimal retouching, no dramatic styling or accessories.

How we do it at Doublle

Doublle Cast 2.0

Skin that still looks like skin.

No plastic sheen, no smoothed-over faces. Pores, freckles, fine lines and flyaway hairs all stay — so your photos look shot, not generated.

We understand the finer details

How cloth, fabric and fit come together — the stretch, the drape, the weight, where it holds and where it gives.
We read each one from your garment, so what we generate behaves like the real thing.

Our Drape 1.0 covers 68+ parameters to get fabric and fit right
Weight, stretch, ease, drape and hem — every one from your own garment.

Quality & Defination

- Fine forehead lines remain visible through the highlights.
- Under-eye skin has creases, slight puffiness, and changing texture density.
- Small pigmentation marks and blemishes appear around the forehead and nose bridge.
- Eyebrows contain individual hairs instead of solid painted shapes.
- The hairline includes short baby hairs and softer transitional strands.
- Skin colour varies subtly between the forehead, eyelids, and under-eye area.
- Eyelid edges and eyelashes have reasonably good micro-detail.

Finer Details

Uneven pore distribution: Pores vary in size, depth, and visibility. They are stronger around the nose and inner cheek and softer toward the jaw.
Directional micro-lines: Fine lines curve and stretch according to facial anatomy, especially around the mouth, cheek, and chin. They don't resemble a flat texture overlay.
Natural tonal variation: The skin contains subtle red, beige, brown, and slightly shadowed areas rather than one perfectly uniform skin colour.
Small imperfections: The mole, faint spots, tiny bumps, and mild pigmentation break the artificial perfection associated with AI faces.
Texture survives the highlights: The nose and cheek reflect light, but pores remain visible. AI-generated skin often becomes smooth and waxy in bright areas.
Realistic lip structure: The lips have irregular vertical grooves, slight colour variation, asymmetrical edges, and uneven moisture—not a uniformly glossy surface.
Region-specific texture: The cheek, nose, upper lip, chin, and jaw each have different surface characteristics.
Natural transitions: Texture gradually changes across facial curves rather than abruptly appearing or disappearing.
Controlled sharpness: The micro-detail is clear without every pore being equally dark and exaggerated.
Subtle asymmetry: The mouth, nostrils, folds, pigmentation, and surface highlights are not perfectly mirrored.
